MISSION

Benedictine is a nonprofit, faith-based organization entrusted with advancing the life-enhancing senior care ministry of the Benedictine Sisters of Duluth, Minnesota. We witness to God's love by creating inclusive communities, supporting those we serve to live well and with purpose, with special concern for the underserved.

BENEDICTINE FOUNDATION

Benedictine Foundation helps bridge the gap between our financial reality and our dreams for a more purposeful and fulfilling life for our residents. Whether it's assistance for someone who has exhausted their financial resources or innovative programming to make their lives more joyful, generous donors enhance our ability to serve our residents.

TABLE OF Contents

“Care of the sick must rank above and before all else so that they may truly be served as Christ, who said: ‘I was sick and you took care of me’ (Matt. 25:36).”

— ST. BENEDICT

A LEGACY OF Service

Thank you for your interest in Benedictine. It's my pleasure to introduce you to our faith-based, nonprofit network of Benedictine and Cerenity senior living communities.

Founded by the Benedictine Sisters of St. Scholastica Monastery in Duluth, Minnesota, we've been serving seniors for over 30 years. The Benedictine order is one of the oldest religious orders of the Christian church and was established by St. Benedict in the sixth century. St. Benedict taught that the Sisters and Brothers of his order should care for the sick above all else.

We at Benedictine take this mandate seriously as we strive to create communities and services that offer wholeness, healing and hope to each person who is entrusted to our care. Our Core Values — Hospitality, Stewardship, Respect and Justice — ignite and sustain our compassionate care.

We remain steadfast in carrying forward our founders' mission of caring for seniors. Benedictine is honored to be part of an enduring legacy of service, flourishing under the sponsorship and prayers of the Sisters of St. Scholastica.

Jerry Carley, CEO
Benedictine

“I wasn’t aware of the Benedictine charism of Hospitality, but I felt it. It’s palpable.”

The Heart OF BENEDICTINE

At Benedictine, our mission is to bring meaning to every resident’s life so they can live fully and live well. Here, age or state of being will never diminish a person’s worth and purpose.

We recognize that as we age, our purpose evolves around life’s many opportunities and challenges. From starting and growing families to retirement, the meaning we find in our lives is constantly changing. At Benedictine, we aim to provide our residents the opportunity to discover and focus on their purpose, so they can find connection and happiness.

“Listen and attend with the ear of your heart.” — ST. BENEDICT

Benedictine is known for providing deeply personal care and comfort. We listen, relate with empathy and serve residents where they are, reminding them that they are welcomed and loved. The exceptional care we offer is based on guiding principles that are at the heart of our mission:

- Benedictine is a faith-based nonprofit that is inclusive and welcomes all people regardless of religious affiliation.
- We offer person-centered, holistic care of mind, body and spirit. We’ve invested in our caregivers by creating a proprietary Benedictine Experience training model that focuses on providing genuine, heartfelt and purpose-driven experiences for our associates, residents and their families.
- All our associates are guided by Benedictine’s Core Values of Hospitality, Stewardship, Respect and Justice and these are promoted throughout our entire network.
- More than 200 of Benedictine’s therapists and caregivers are Dementia Care Specialist certified. They are uniquely equipped to provide the highest level of personalized dementia-capable care and to support people at all cognitive levels and dementia stages.

PERKS OF Community Living

How does living in a community with other seniors benefit you? The truth is, where you live can impact your overall health.

Physical activity, social interaction, mental stimulation and healthy dining are keys to healthy living for seniors, all of which are conveniently available to Benedictine Living Community and Cerenity Senior Care residents.

■ Exercise

Physical activity is known to help maintain one's weight, improve sleep, strengthen bones and regulate blood pressure. Benedictine and Cerenity offer a wide variety of planned physical and social activities. From chair exercises to drumming clubs and fully equipped exercise rooms, residents have access to an assortment of choices. Walking through the carefully maintained gardens and grounds offers a safe space to enjoy a stroll.

■ Fun Activities

According to the National Institute on Aging, seniors who engage in meaningful activities, such as volunteering and hobbies, report feeling happier and healthier. Benedictine and Cerenity residents can choose from a host of social events such as summer barbecues, reading clubs, crafts, musical performances and much more. Have an interest in serving? Volunteer opportunities are also available on campus and in the community.

■ Social Connection

With so much focus on social isolation during the pandemic, the advantages of living in a senior community have come to light. Research shows that those who are socially isolated experience more health issues, while senior living communities focus on offering activities that encourage residents to interact. From sharing conversations over meals and social hours, to enjoying shared interests such as playing cards, quilting, crafts or sports, residents can find ways to easily connect with others.

■ Nutritious Meals

Good nutrition is also essential to a healthy lifestyle. Cooking balanced meals for one or two can be challenging. Who among us hasn't been frustrated when thinking of something new to eat that is healthy and budget friendly? Registered dietitians oversee menu choices to ensure Benedictine and Cerenity residents have healthy, balanced meal choices every day without the hassle of shopping, preparing and cleaning up. Eating with friends in the dining room adds the benefits of social interaction to good nutrition.

Advice from Benedictine residents on transitioning to a senior living community:

“Don’t wait too long. If you don’t wait too long, you can ease into it.” – JOE

“It’s the thing to do so you’re not by yourself — you make lots of friends. And it’s better for your health.” – BETTY

“Make the decision before someone else has to make it for you. [Moving] was my own decision.” – TOM

“Come when you’re younger. I wish we’d come here when we were 70. That’s 11 more years we could have been here enjoying these wonderful people and such a nice place to live. I just love my apartment!” – JUDITH

Talking With a Parent

ABOUT TRANSITIONING TO SENIOR LIVING

It's not always easy to talk with an aging parent or loved one about a need for additional care that may lead to moving out of the family home, but delaying these conversations won't make the issue go away. Doing nothing or delaying the conversation may put a parent's health, safety or well-being at risk, while possibly accelerating their declining health and your own stress level as a caregiver.

The solution is to do some advance planning — before problems arise or get worse — to make these conversations easier for everyone.

■ Planning the Conversation

Start early. An AARP survey shows that most older adults feel better about having future planning discussions when things are going well. Too often, families delay having these discussions until after a parent has had an unexpected health issue or crisis and is no longer able to take care of themselves. The urgency at this time causes increased stress, confusion and uncertainty when the clock is ticking. At that point care options are limited, and significant decisions must be made quickly.

Being proactive instead of reactive will help provide calm, thoughtful discussions, and ensure families have a plan in place should a loved one's health situation change unexpectedly. Planning ahead also enables mom or dad to get on a senior living community's waiting list, if necessary. Selecting a "continuum of care" community allows adult children to choose the best care option for their loved one, while planning for additional assistance should the need arise.

“ The pandemic had taken a toll on my husband's grandmother, keeping her isolated at home. But once she moved to her new senior community, she discovered friends that became like family, her apartment turned into a place of laughter, joy and connections that filled her days.”

— LINDSAY

Prepare for the discussion. You might consider scheduling a time for the talk and giving your loved one a list of questions, issues or concerns beforehand. This helps them prepare for the conversation by letting them think about the specific kinds of help they may need or what's important to them in a new living environment. At the same time, you're facilitating their important need for some degree of control in their lives. By knowing their wishes, you'll be better able to help your parent live life the way they want.

Decide the best people to be involved. Usually this includes adult children who live nearby and may already be involved in caring for mom or dad. It may also include a spouse of the aging parent if the couple has different care needs. Limit the number of participants to avoid overwhelming the parent or loved one. You can always update additional family members after the conversation. Often it can be helpful to have someone in addition to adult children involved in the discussion; mom or dad may be more likely to listen to an independent, unbiased perspective from an outside party, such as a trusted friend, relative, doctor or pastor.

■ Asking Questions the Right Way

Once you come together, there are particular communication procedures you might use and signals to watch for — both within yourself and your loved one. Seniors seem to have a radar that is highly tuned to the signals we send when we're about to tamper with their control without their permission. We need to signal back that we're friendly and "on their side." Keep in mind that you're "partnering" with your loved one to solve a particular need or issue in their life, as opposed to "parenting" or taking a one-sided approach that tells them what to do or what is best.

Consider this approach in speech and delivery of your side of the conversation:

- Give your loved one time to settle in and get comfortable.
- Listen with your full attention and let the conversation flow. Make it a dialogue instead of getting preoccupied with your own "agenda."
- Don't rush. Wait for them to gather their thoughts. Pause is good, and silence can serve a great purpose. Indicate with your own body language that you're "all ears" and eager to hear more.
- Speak in terms of questions, not answers, so you can gather as much information as possible.
- Be thoughtful in choosing the right words so your meaning is clear and supportive.

Here are some suggestions for dealing with delicate topics:

Approach the subject indirectly:

"Mom, I know you're taking a lot of pills. How do you keep track of them? Would it help if you had someone to remind you when to take your medication?"

"John says his dad has given up driving. Have you thought about how you would get around if you could no longer drive?"

Be direct, but non-confrontational:

"Mom, I'm worried that you seem to be unsteady on your feet. I'm wondering what we can do to help protect you from falls?"

"Dad, if you ever decided it's not a good idea to live alone, have you thought about where you might want to live?"

Watch for openings:

“Uncle Joe, you said you were having problems with your eyesight. Now that you no longer drive, do you have anyone who can take you to your regular doctors’ appointments?”

“Gramps, after you said last week that you had trouble turning the handles on the water faucets, I wondered how you were managing with the shower?”

Share your own feelings about your loved one’s changing life:

“You’ve always been so independent, Dad. I imagine it’s hard for you to ask for help now. But if it were readily available, what kinds of things would you like help with?”

“Aunt Jane, I know you must be bored alone in the house all day with me at work. Wouldn’t it be nice to be someplace where you can be around interesting people and have stimulating things to do?”

■ Calming Resistance

Be prepared for your loved one to resist any conversation about their diminishing independence and health. They may be offended, telling you to mind your own business, or they may dismiss your concern with reassuring statements, preferring to pretend that life is as normal as it has always been for them.

In such situations, experts advise:

- Respect their feelings if they make it clear they want to avoid the subject, then make a mental note to return to the conversation at a more suitable time.
- Push the issue if their health or safety is at risk, yet recognize their right to be in charge of their own life.
- If you decide you simply must intervene, act firmly, but with compassion: “Dad, we can’t ignore this any longer, we must deal with the situation. I’m here to help.”
- Involve other people your parents respect, such as a family friend, attorney or minister.
- Hold a family meeting so everyone can discuss concerns and jointly develop a mutually agreeable plan. Once your loved one has agreed to at least consider the idea of seeking additional help, possibly in a continuing care senior community, research your options carefully and learn everything you can about what life will be like for your loved one if a move is the answer.

Moving to an independent living, assisted living, memory care or skilled nursing community can be one of the best decisions a family can make for an aging parent. This is particularly the case when activities of daily living become more than they can handle, social isolation is an issue, or their care needs are more than family members can provide. Starting the conversation early will make your loved one’s transition into their next phase of life easier and more enjoyable for everyone involved.

How To Choose

A SENIOR LIVING COMMUNITY

Choosing a senior living community can be an emotional process, but it doesn't have to be overwhelming. Be sure to know what to look for when touring a community and ask important questions. We've compiled helpful information and a comprehensive list of questions that will give you confidence that you're making the right decisions.

■ What is the right level of care?

Independent living can be an ideal choice when you're in good health, able to care for yourself and want to live a more vibrant, fulfilling and worry-free lifestyle. If you are feeling isolated or lonely in your home, you may thrive in an environment that is rich with neighbors, activities, events and other social opportunities.

Assisted living suits seniors who have had a slight decline in health and need help performing one or more daily living activities, such as bathing, grooming or dressing. If you or a loved one desires social connection with few responsibilities and easily accessible care, assisted living may be ideal for you. Typically, assisted living communities offer prepared meals three times a day and help with housekeeping and laundry.

When a loved one can no longer effectively manage the tasks of day-to-day living, long-term skilled nursing care is often the best choice. Many choose skilled nursing care after a prolonged illness or as the effects of aging increase dependency. A stroke, heart attack or accident can immediately change life circumstances, and skilled nursing may offer the best way to ensure proper, around the clock care.

The onset of memory loss is often gradual and inconsistent. When your loved one experiences memory loss that disrupts daily life, has difficulty with words and/or withdraws from social activities, residential memory care may be the right choice. The structure, security, and person-centered care of a memory care program can decrease anxiety and add quality to the life of a dementia patient, and ease the concern and strain on family caregivers. Whenever memory loss is suspected, consult with your physician.

Physicians prescribe short-term rehabilitation when they deem it necessary to a patient's successful recovery. Hospitalization for any of the following medical conditions is likely to result in a physician recommending short-term rehab: life-threatening injury or illness, major surgery, significant injury or emergency trauma. Outpatient rehabilitation also may be prescribed.

■ Ask lots of questions.

Focus on important lifestyle factors

- Is the care community close to familiar surroundings, friends and family?
- Is specialty care available for a particular concern or diagnosis?
- Does the community provide engaging activities and social events?
- Does it offer private rooms or apartments, or shared accommodations?
- If pets are an important part of your life, does the community allow them?
- Do you seek a large setting with more neighbors, staff and amenities?
Or is a smaller, cozier environment more to your liking?

How will the services be paid for and what is the cost?

- Is there a fixed cost or incremental fees?
- How is the monthly rate determined?
- Is the community nonprofit? Fees paid to nonprofit senior care communities go directly toward care services and facility maintenance, instead of investors' pockets.
- Do you have the resources to pay? If personal funds will eventually be depleted, are there other sources to pay for the care available?

Tour with all of your senses

- Are residents well cared for and comfortable?
- Are staff members engaged with residents? Are the interactions kind and considerate?
- Is the environment clean and inviting?
- Are meals appealing?
- Are staff members attentive to resident needs and requests?

- Are there opportunities to engage with others and social events planned, not only during the day but on weekends and evenings?

Is care personalized?

- How is care planned and communicated to all staff?
- How are residents involved in planning care delivery? What accommodations are provided for individual preferences (bathing, rising and bedtime, meal preferences, routines and personal pursuits)?
- Who provides the care? What disciplines are involved and how is work assigned and coordinated?
- What type of training do staff members have? How long have they been with the organization?
- How is the care plan communicated and how are changes to the care plan made and monitored?
- How can someone summon assistance and what is the anticipated response time?
- What activities are offered?
- Is spiritual care important to you and if yes, how is it provided?

■ What are your personal preferences or needs and how will they be accommodated?

Extent of care and contract

- Is there a limit to the care available at the location? What are the limits and what happens if a move is needed?
- What is the duration of the rental or admission agreement?

Personal support system

- Are there services or expectations that the family must provide or be a part of?
- Is transportation available to appointments?
- Are shopping opportunities on location or trips available?
- Are concierge services available?
- Do physicians and other health professionals visit the location or must one leave the premises to receive services?

What is your overall feeling about your experience touring the senior care community?

- Were you or your loved one well attended to?
- Who is the organization providing services? What is their mission, reputation?
- Are regulatory surveys and safety features in good standing?

Individual preferences and perceptions can vary widely, so be sure to carefully consider how a senior community can best suit you or your loved one's needs. More articles about senior living are available at BenedictineLiving.org/Resources.

Tips for downsizing AND MOVING

■ Many communities provide helpful services

If just the thought of moving makes you feel overwhelmed, you are not alone. After all, it's not something you do very often. And there's no doubt about it: selling a house you've lived in for any length of time, preparing to move, actually moving, and getting settled in your new place all add up to a big event.

But if you are moving to a senior housing community, you are not on your own. Benedictine offers advice and moving services to help simplify and organize every step of the process for you. We do this so you can experience a smooth, stress-free transition to your new home. This way you can start enjoying the many joys of community life much sooner. As you are comparing communities, be sure to ask if they offer any moving services. In the meantime, here are some general tips for downsizing and moving.

■ Lighten your load and find new freedom

Tired of looking at all that "stuff" in your garage, basement or extra bedroom? The best way to deal with this is in bite-size chunks, such as one closet — or even one drawer — at a time. Look for a Salvation Army, Goodwill Industries, thrift store or other charitable organization to which you can donate as you downsize. If you can, start early so you're not scrambling at the last minute.

■ 10 Ways to get started on streamlining your life:

- Declutter briefly and often. A 15-minute stint, performed regularly, delivers surprising results sooner than you might expect.
- Add decluttering to your calendar. Daily, weekly, three times a week, or whatever works best for you. Cross it off when you've taken care of it.
- The No-More-Stuff Rule. It's simple: Just don't allow any more things into the house in the first place.
- The One-In-Two-Out Rule. If you can't follow the No-More-Stuff Rule, try this one: Whenever you bring a new item in, get rid of two others.
- "Gift" everything. Pat yourself on the back for being generous as you give away what you don't need to family and friends — or donate it to charity.
- Shrink your storage. With less space at hand, you'll find it's easier not to hang on to things.
- The Clothing Rule. If you haven't worn an item in the past year, you've proven you don't need it.
- The One-Year-and-Gone Rule. It's like the Clothing Rule, except it applies to other belongings. If you haven't put an item to use during the past year — a kitchen appliance, a craft project, set of linens, etc. — that item is subject to extra scrutiny. Because chances are, you don't really need it.
- Get help. Call on a trusted friend or relative to help you sort. He or she won't have the same emotional attachment you have to your belongings, and can render an unbiased opinion about what you should keep or toss.
- The One-Room-at-a-Time Rule. When you focus on one room and finish it completely, you'll get that marvelous feeling of success, which is a terrific motivator for moving on to declutter the next room.

■ Help your house look its best

The real estate agent you select to market your house may recommend minor repairs and spruce-ups that will help your house show well to other real estate agents and potential buyers.

General tips to consider:

- Fix it first. Make repairs to dripping faucets, cracked windows, damaged walls and doors, and the like. Even a cursory home inspection will make note of minor repairs needed, and most buyers will ask you to fix these things anyway as a condition of the sale.
- Organize and clean. Pack up least-used items and store them off site or neatly in the garage or basement. Better yet, donate or sell them. Have a deep cleaning done, so the whole house shines.
- Depersonalize. As you organize and clean, tuck away personal items such as photo displays that distract buyers and keep them from imagining your house as their own. Even if you have beautiful items displayed, put them away for safety and to help create a blank canvas for prospective buyers.
- Get replacement estimates on any big-ticket items that will need to be replaced soon, such as the roof or carpeting. Even if you don't plan to replace these items yourself, it will be handy to have estimates when negotiations begin.

- Gather warranties, guarantees and user manuals for any appliances or fixtures that will remain with the house.
- Spruce up the exterior. Curb appeal gets potential buyers in the door, and inviting outdoor living areas are highly desired. Take a critical look at your house and grounds. Everything needs to look fresh, clean and neatly manicured.

When your home is decluttered and looking beautiful, take pictures of your favorite spaces so you can recreate them in your new apartment.

■ Last-minute details

It's easy to overlook paperwork with the busyness of packing and moving, so don't forget these details:

- Discontinue utilities and internet.
- Update addresses for bank and credit card accounts, driver's license/vehicle registration, insurance policies, investment and retirement accounts, Medicare and Social Security and voter registration.
- Provide your new address to the post office.
- Let friends and family know your new address and invite them to visit!

As the saying goes, "out with the old and in with the new" ... new friendships, new experiences, and a new quality of life await at a senior living community. You will thrive in a home where there is safety, security and assistance if needed, along with people just like you experiencing the same life changes.

"This is a very good place. The people do anything and everything for you. They're gentle. I do therapy every day. The [therapists] are wonderful. We have a lot of fun."
